Making an impact

It goes without saying that we make investments for the sole benefit of our clients, but what if our investing activities can make a wider positive impact too?

I was in Ghana two weeks ago for the official opening of the two twelve-storey office blocks that we have just completed in the capital city of Accra. We are very pleased that both were completed on time and under budget.

The dedication ceremony of SU Tower for Scripture Union Ghana was perhaps one of the most rewarding mornings of my career. Scripture Union Ghana is part of Scripture Union (the international, inter-denominational, evangelical Christian movement) and it is active in more than 90% of Ghana's high schools. Before we met them, Scripture Union Ghana operated out of a completely dilapidated 1960's building on a strategically located piece of land that they own. We leased their land and provided the funding and development expertise to relocate them before demolishing and replacing their building with a Grade A office block that they will fully own when our 27-year lease expires. This will then provide this very worthy charity with an annuity income for life. Approximately 400 people, including several business and religious leaders, attended the dedication and the level of sheer joy displayed in the charismatic speeches, harmonious singing and spontaneous dancing was humbling in the extreme.

In another example, during the development and construction of 335 Place, we experienced severe flooding of Ghana's main east-west highway which passes immediately south of the property. The rain water covered all three lanes and completely cut off the traffic. We requested our structural engineer to conduct an assessment and he determined that the drainage pipes underneath the highway had insufficient capacity. The local council has very limited resources available for capital projects, so we invested a small portion of our project savings on installing an additional larger pipe underneath the highway which has eliminated the flooding during subsequent rain storms. This has had a positive tangible impact on 335 Place's tenants as well as the wider community.

In addition, if one considers job creation, 335 Place had a peak staff of 419 whilst the SU Tower development had a maximum of 796 people on site. The main contractor also has a program of upskilling staff so that those with the most basic jobs can be trained in more specialist roles such as carpentry, thereby enabling them to be more employable in the future.

We are currently finalising the leasing of both buildings and we will then arrange for an independent valuation which will hopefully provide an uplift for our investors. We believe that our two developments have already contributed to the growth of Ghana's economy by creating jobs during the construction process. We believe that they will continue to do so through the provision of world class office space that will enable companies to operate efficiently and compete internationally whilst simultaneously providing a meaningful real return for our investors.
